The lysine market remained weak recently due to soft demand. Mainstream producers lowered quotations to varying degrees, while market transactions were mainly concluded through negotiation. End-users continued to purchase based on immediate needs, and trading channels maintained a cautious attitude. Current market prices for 98.5% lysine are around USD 1030-1080/MT, while 70% lysine is traded at approximately USD 600-620/MT. Prices are expected to remain under pressure in the near term.

The doxycycline hydrochloride market remained sluggish this week, with downstream buyers adopting a cautious wait-and-see approach. Although mainstream manufacturers continued efforts to support prices through controlled supply, actual transactions were still mainly negotiated by buyers, leading to slightly lower transaction prices. Current market prices are around USD 43/KG.

FOOD ADDITIVE

Recently, U.S. Representative Maxine Dexter introduced the Dietary Supplement Listing Act, forming a coordinated legislative push alongside a related Senate proposal. Under the proposed legislation, dietary supplement companies would be required to electronically submit detailed product information to the FDA before marketing or within a specified transition period, including product name, ingredient list, allergen declarations, and company information. Approved products would receive a listing number that must appear on product labels, while unlisted products could not be legally sold. If enacted, the legislation would mark the first mandatory pre-market registration system for dietary supplements in the United States, shifting regulatory oversight from mainly post-market enforcement toward a pre-market filing framework.
