VITAMIN

01

- Market reversals often emerge when least expected. Vitamin C is a recent example. Despite widespread skepticism toward earlier bullish signals, the market has gradually shifted upward. With supply tightening amid upcoming maintenance shutdowns and producers showing strong pricing discipline, VC prices have entered an upward cycle that may extend into the coming quarters.
- Vitamin E is now attracting increasing market attention. Distribution channel inventories remain low, while producers are carrying limited stock. At the same time, raw material costs remain elevated and supply availability continues to be tight. With the industry's concentrated maintenance season expected to begin at the end of June and last for approximately two months, market participants are closely monitoring the potential for further price increases.

Recently introduced policies in China have increased support for the development of marine-derived functional health ingredients, including fish oil, krill oil, sea cucumber peptides, chitosan, and oyster peptides. The new measures are expected to accelerate the commercialization of novel marine bioactive ingredients, particularly in areas such as antioxidant health, lipid management, and sleep support, creating new opportunities for the marine nutrition and health industry.
